London, 24 April (AP) -- Reports from behind the Iron Curtain indicate that some of the USSR's largest installations for atomic research will be moved to China in the next few months.

The information stems from the same unofficial source that reported the first Russian bomb explosion a few days before it was announced by President Truman.

At the same time, it is reported that work on the Russian hydrogen bomb has progressed so far that practical research with an experimental bomb will be conducted in July of this year under the direction of Professor Pontecorvo, who disappeared from Great Britain in 1950 and who was later reported to have been seen in the USSR.
